Cyberpunk 2077 Cut This Gameplay Feature, But For A Good Reason

CD Projekt Red says the feature was removed for "design reasons."

Game development is an iterative process. Features are often added and removed regularly during the development process as the team discovers what works best. For Cyberpunk 2077, developer CD Projekt Red worked on a wall-running feature, but it won't make it into the final game. In a new interview, one of the game's designers explained why the feature was cut.

Level designer Max Pears told GameReactor that while wall-running has been cut for design reasons, the game will offer players "a lot of flexibility" with how they move game in the world, but it really hasn't gone anywhere. It may not get discussed as much today, but Minecraft still has legions of loyal fans, and the attention from new additions to the franchise like Minecraft Dungeons may even bring lapsed players back, or introduce new ones to it for the first time.
